Wonderful prodigies of judgment and mercy: discovered in above three hundred memorable histories, containing I. Dreadful judgments upon atheists, perjured persons, blasphemers, swearers, cursers and scoffers. II. The miserable ends of divers magicians, witches, conjurers, &c. with several strange apparitions. III. Remarkable presages of approaching death, and of appeals to divine justice. IV. The wicked lives, and woful deaths of wretched popes, apostates, and desperate persecutors. V. Fearful judgments upon cruel tyrants, murderers, &c. with the wonderful discovery of murders. VI. Admirable deliverances from imminent dangers and deplorable distresses at sea

MEMOIR OF JOHN BUNYAN.

the winter, at seven o'clock, and on the Lord's-day about 3000, "so that he was pulled almost over people to get into the pulpit."

Like all popular men, he suffered from the tongue of slander. He was called a wizard, a Jesuit, a highwayman. The affecting narrative of Agnes Bonmont detects some of these wicked aspersions. "These I glory in," said Bunyan, "because they are false." Returning home from a visit of mercy to Reading, to reconcile an offended father to his son, he was seized with a fatal fever, at the house of a friend, Mr. Strudwick, of London. His resignation was most exemplary; his desire was to depart and grins into the Celestial City on the 31st of August, 1688.

His birth year witnessed the "Bill of Rights;" his death year the deliverance of England from popish tyranny.

His remains lie in Bunhill Fields, under a table tomb.
